Q: Can a parallelepiped divide into triangular prisms? Given a parallelepiped $P = \{(x,y,z): x^2+y^2+z^2 \leq a^2, x,y,z > 0\}$. Can we pick three of the four sides (the base of the parallelepiped) so that we can cut out three rectangular surfaces? I tried to prove this, but got stuck at the very beginning. A: This is not true. Choose x and y to be both positive and negative and choose z to be positive. Nike's new reengineered logo is a big step forward - matthewmueller ===== nollidge This is a bit of editorializing, but I actually find the original Nike logo pretty distinctive. ~~~ pbhjpbhj The hideous slight diagonal lines in the red one, the green one has nothing less than a 'D' in it. The logos were the 'house mark' when the shop first opened, and at the time you had to have a logo on your shop, so they necessarily had to be pretty bad. Certainly a lot
